Weather of Concern

- Stormy weather will impact portions of Northern California and Southern California through Monday. Two primary waves are expected and will be water and wind related. Periods of heavy precipitation may lead to widespread urban and localized flooding making travel more dangerous.
- The Sacramento Weather area of responsibility, which includes burn scar areas in Lake, Yolo, Butte, El Dorado, Calaveras and Amador counties, advises that the upcoming weather event is not anticipated to produce precipitation rates, over the burn scar areas, which will exceed the debris flow criteria that has been established by the National Weather Service.
- Red Flag Warning in effect until 2100 hours this evening for areas in San Bernardino County

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

Periods of Heavy Precipitation and Strong Gusty Winds Through Early Monday

The majority of Northern California has received wetting rain already with areas at the southern end just starting to see light rain. Wetting rain will spread over the southern end between now and this afternoon. Gusty winds accompanying this first wave of precipitation will come to an end by this afternoon. Another wave of strong SE-SW winds and heavy precipitation will move through Northern California from northwest to southeast on Saturday, and a third on Sunday. Peak gusts will reach 40-50 mph in many areas with the wave on Saturday, and wind-prone areas like Weed could possibly see 60 mph or higher. The wave on Sunday will be slightly weaker. Snow levels will remain 6000-7000 feet through early Sunday, then come down to 5000-6000 feet with the wave on Sunday. The final wave will be over with by midday Monday, and only a few light mountain showers will continue. Things begin to dry out Tuesday and high pressure will become rather strong the rest of next week with a marked warming and drying trend expected. Unseasonably cool temperatures will last into next week with our warmest areas dropping into the lower and mid 60s this weekend before that warming returns next week.

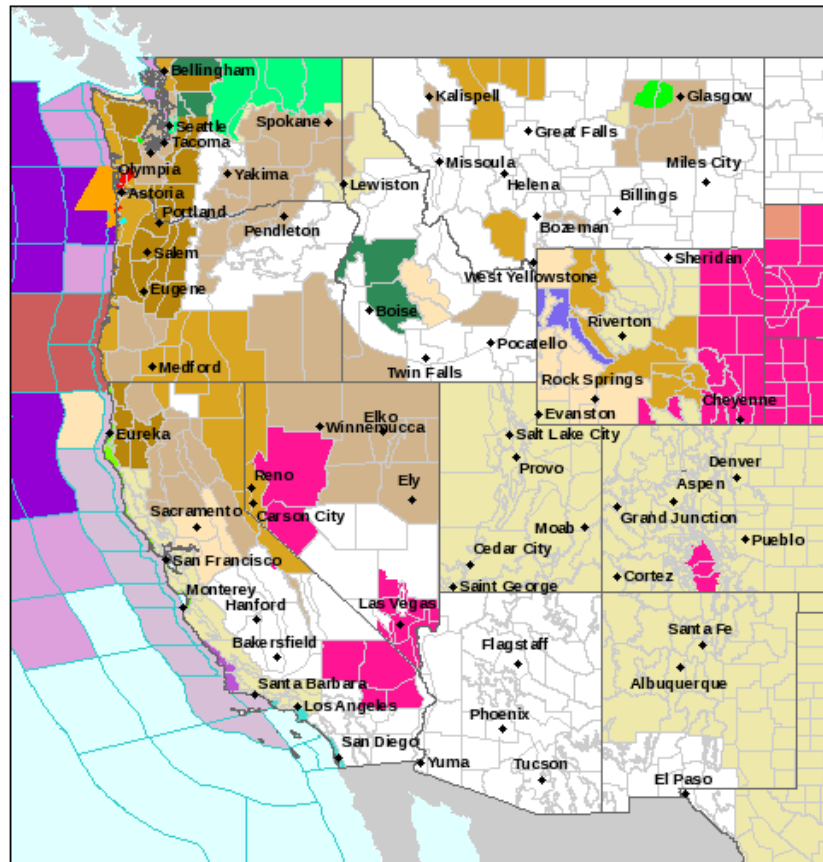

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

Windy, hot, and very dry next Wednesday and Thursday

A weak ridge of high pressure over Southern California will maintain near normal temperatures today, with mid 60s to mid 70s across the mountains and mid 70s to mid 80s in the valleys. Minimum humidity will be mainly between 15% and 30% today. A couple of Pacific storms will move into Northern California this evening through Monday afternoon bringing scattered showers at times to much of Central California. Most locations over Central California will receive between a quarter inch and a half inch of rainfall with these storms. However, the Central Sierra and its surrounding foothills will receive up to 2 inches of rainfall. There will be little or no rainfall across Southern California. Those locations that receive rainfall across Southern California will be due to drizzle from a deep marine layer. Southwest to west winds of 20 to 40 mph with gusts to 60 mph will surface across the mountain ridges and desert passes this afternoon through Monday afternoon. Temperatures will become a little below normal Saturday through Monday. A strong ridge of high pressure will build into California from the Pacific Ocean bringing a significant warming and drying trend Tuesday through the end of next week. There will be strong north winds across the South Coast of Santa Barbara and the I-5 Corridor Monday night through Tuesday morning and then there be strong northeast to east winds across the mountains and below the canyons and passes of Southern California Tuesday night through Friday morning.
